“Each house comprises a courtyard and a boundary wall that contains it. These courtyards are unique elements complete sunk in the land and through which access to the street, the house and the upper part of the land can be gained, where the communal swimming pool can be found . . . Thus the life in the house is unique and exclusively surrounding the courtyard, which turns it into an integral part of its existence. All the divisions interlink and depend of the same light source.”
